Description:

The purpose of this track is to be an open meeting point for researchers and teachers in organizational sustainability (private sector, public organizations, nonprofit sector). Speaking of organizational sustainability: Is it an empty signifier? Something limited to committed entrepreneurs and customers? True and efficient efforts to meet the challenges of the Anthropocene? An oxymoron as capitalism is by definition un-sustainable? Or something else?

- Sustainable production
 - Sustainable consumption
 - Sustainable supply chains
 - Circular economy
 - Collaboration and co-creation for sustainability
 - Employee environmental activism
 - Gender and sustainability
 - Green human resource management
 - Environmental governance
 - Innovation for sustainability
 - Sustainable cultures
 - Social sustainability; social innovation, and change(s) for sustainability
 - Sustainable region and cities
 - Resilience studies
 - Organizational degrowth

- and more.

The common denominator is an interest for sustainability and we invite participants with a background in organization, leadership, accounting, finance, marketing, strategy, production management, service management, public administration, business law, computer science and artificial intelligence, economic and cultural geography, sustainability studies, and more.

The track aims at a theoretical diversity, from conventional management approaches to more specific approaches such as social and cultural studies, ecofeminism, posthumanism, or environmental humanities.

We welcome also particularly communication on how to teach organizational sustainability, for example about how to meet the challenge of trans-disciplinary teaching.

Please note: No plastic water allowed on-board.
